

Recently restrictions began to tentatively ease allowing people to come together again, which of course is a great thing and we hope the road map stays firmly on track. On a downside and as we predicted this has had a serious impact on the demand for our home delivery ready meals.

Therefore, we feel that now is the right time to hang up our ready meal aprons and begin to consider returning to event catering. After all we specialise in catering for people coming together and not staying apart.

We need to give huge thanks to everyone who has supported our business over the last 12 months and contributed in saving a great local business from the pandemic. We've met some great people along the journey and hope to see them again in much more social circumstances.
